Description:

This Report Card summarizes the current situation of HIV prevention strategies and services for men who have sex with men and transgender people in Cambodia and aims to support efforts to increase and improve the programmatic, policy and funding actions taken on HIV prevention. The research analyzes four key components that are widely recognized to be essential for effective action on HIV prevention for key populations: Legal and social context, availability of services, accessibility of services, and participation and rights. It also provides recommendations for key national, regional and international stakeholders and service providers, to enhance action on HIV prevention strategies and services for men who have sex with men and transgender people. This Report Card is based on extensive research carried out during 2010 including published data and in-country qualitative research in Cambodia.
